

Biography for Diana Burley

Diana L. Burley (Ph.D. Carnegie Mellon) is Associate Professor in the Graduate School of Education and Human Development at The George Washington University (GW). Dr. Burley joined GW in 2007 and during her tenure she has served as Chair of the Department of Human and Organizational Learning and as Director of the Executive Leadership Doctoral Program. Prior to joining the GW faculty, she served as a Program Officer at the National Science Foundation (NSF) where she managed multi-million dollar grant programs designed to increase the capacity of the U.S. higher education enterprise to produce professionals in scientific fields. Based on her work as lead for the Scholarship for Service (Cybercorps) program, Dr. Burley was honored by the Federal Chief Information Officers Council and the Colloquium on Information Systems Security Education for outstanding efforts toward the development of the federal cybersecurity workforce. She is the immediate past-Vice Chair of the Association for Computing Machinery Special Interest Group on Computers and Society (ACM SIGCAS), an advisory board member of the GW Cybersecurity Research and Policy Institute (CSPRI), and a member of the national board of directors for Goodwill Industries International.