

Biography for Deanna D. Caputo

Deanna D. Caputo received her Ph.D. in Social and Personality Psychology from Cornell University, with specialization in Judgment and Decision-making and Psychology and Law. She currently works in the Washington D.C area for the MITRE Corporation as a Lead Behavioral Psychologist supporting the United States law enforcement and intelligence communities, and previously worked for the US Department of Defense as a senior human factors intelligence analyst. Dr. Caputo has 15 years of experience in designing, conducting, and analyzing experimental research with human participants, using both quantitative and qualitative analyses. She is also proficient in profiling human decision-making behavior and conducting social network analyses. Her main area of operational consultation and research is human behavior and cyber security, particularly insider threat. Dr. Caputo has multiple psychological articles published in peer-reviewed journals, authored a book chapter, and her most recent publication is “Detecting the Theft of Trade Secrets by Insiders: A Summary of MITRE Insider Threat Research”, IEEE Security & Privacy, Nov/Dec 2009.